

nightmares. There is the true nightmare, which is a dream, often long and complicated, details of which may remain vivid long after waking. Then there is the "night terror" from which the sleeper suddenly wakes in great fright. And unlike the rich texture of the nightmare, no story is connected with it. The sleeper remembers nothing at all, or at the very most a single frightening impression on the order of "something sitting on me."

34. Each year thousands of people suffer severe head traumas in car crashes, falls or other accidents. Most such patients require long-term care, and so far, treatments have been disappointing. Now researchers, at several hospitals are testing whether they can help more patients recover fully by cooling them with ice water. The idea is to lower body temperature enough to slow a person's metabolism, thereby slowing a cascade of chemical reactions that immediately follow head injury and cause the death of brain cells. During hypothermic or cooling-therapy, patients are covered with cool blankets attached to pumps that provide a constant infusion of water. The body temperature is lowered in four to six hours to about 33°C - low enough to slow metabolism but not so low to cause life-threatening complications, like irregular heartbeat. Patients remain in this state for 24 or 48 hours.

On the other hand, with the development of modern science and technology, man is just beginning to learn about wildlife.

We have to understand that we protect ourselves through protecting wildlife. ① On the one hand, any species of wildlife, as a critical joint of the ecological chain, helps to establish the ecological balance. ② If one species becomes extinct, it will disappear forever. ③ What is more, it will inevitably result in the extinction of a chain of wildlife. ④ For example, if wild rubber trees had been extinct two centuries ago, there would be no auto industry today. ⑤

37. I don't need to be told smoking is bad for me. I know that. But it's like being in love with a man who's no good. You know you're a fool, but you just can't help it. I don't need to be told I ought to give up smoking. Sometimes I just sit in front of a mirror and watch myself breathing in that poison gas. If I were in a concentration camp and someone tried to make me do that, I'd want to kill them. People don't love themselves enough to cut down their smoking, but they may love someone else enough to do it. I think that exercise is a healthy way to help me stop smoking. Exercise can't resist the damage being done to my body while I continue to smoke, but it can help me kick the habit. Every time I cough badly, I make up my mind never to smoke again. Anyhow the thought of lung cancer caused by smoking will help me to stop smoking forever.

38. The average human spends 1/3 of his or her lifetime sleeping. Imagine how much people could accomplish if they spent less time sleeping. For many high school students, getting enough rest is not a priority. A survey confirms that teens are staying up too late at night, usually getting 7 hours of sleep instead of the recommended 9 hours. Although teenagers' internal clocks are partially to blame for not sleeping earlier, many students lose sleep because of school. Schools should allow students ample time for sleep, taking jobs, sports, and other extracurricular activities into consideration. Students who are extremely busy and lose sleep as a result should not have to drop their activities in order to get more rest. With colleges becoming increasingly competitive, it is unreasonable for students to be forced to choose between sleeping and excelling.

The Open University was created in 1969 to provide university education for anyone aged 21 or over who wanted it. (A) It uses teaching methods that are quite unlike anything to be found in other universities, but awards degrees that are recognized as equal to those of any other. By way of television and radio, the Open University teaches its students in the comfort and privacy of their own houses. (B) this revolutionary teaching method, it's not surprising that, fourteen years ago, there were many who said the Open University would never succeed. They claimed that adults without previous academic experience simply would not be able to study at university level. Today, those people have been proved wrong. So far, about 43,000 students of the Open University students have graduated with BA degrees.

41. Western Europe in the eleventh century was in an especially advantageous position. While elements of the Greek, Roman civilizations lay readily within reach, Europeans inherited a society in which nearly all the upper levels of ancient civilized institutions had disappeared, and only simple agricultural communities remained. Europeans could therefore build anew, utilizing elements from their neighbors according to choice. Moreover, the worldwide claims of the Roman Catholic church, together with the military success achieved by French armies on every front, gave Western Europeans a secure sense of superiority. This prevented both slavish imitation of their more civilized neighbors and the fear that any borrowing might endanger their cultural independence.

Today, those people remain in this state for 24 or 48 hours.

One of the hottest debates of the 1990s, the refashioning of the British countryside by landowners and developers, is being raised to an intellectual plane. This week the Open University (OU) launches what it claims is the first comprehensive academic (a) course on conservation and land use in Britain.

The OU expects to draw its students from the ranks of front-line campaigning conservationists and those professionally involved in the environment, such as national park and wildlife reserve wardens. It is also hoping for local and country council planners to join (b) the course.

Dr. John Blunden, (c) the course team chairman, says: "We have discovered that council planners don't properly understand the nature of the rural environment they are dealing with. Most planning (d) course in universities are obliged to stay in such occupations in order to support themselves and their families; their chance of escaping is very limited. The result, very often, is that they become fixed in their habits and they learn not to learn.

There has been a collision between a passenger train and a goods train in Greater Manchester. The goods train was carrying fuel and some of its tankers exploded and burst into flames in the accident. The fire has now been put out by foam. First reports say that two people have been killed. The accident happened on a stretch of line which runs close to a residential area and a section of the M602 motorway, alongside the track, has been closed to traffic to allow emergency services to get to the scene. There are reports to be about seventy people injured, but only four of them seriously. British Rail has refused to comment on speculation that a signal failure was the cause of the accident. They say their investigators will begin work immediately. Police have issued the following telephone number for information about the crash: that's 061-228-2973.
